Road safety publicity campaign is part of a set of activities that aim to promote safe road use. Campaigns are of three types:

1. To raise awareness of an issue or to inform (for example about new laws)
2. To change attitudes (for example to improve public acceptance of road safety measures)
3. To change behavior, as part of a package of measures (for example engineering and/or enforcement related to speeding).

A campaign is important to lift the profile of a road safety problem, say speeding, as a legal/criminal issue, and to make drivers aware of the risk of prosecution
