GOVERNING BODY

The governing body of an institution is responsible for effective management and future development planning. Comprising distinguished individuals such as educationists and industrialists, the governing body oversees the institutions affairs, with a focus on teaching and research objectives. This includes approving the strategic plan, identifying financial, physical, and staffing strategies, and providing advice on starting new academic programs.

The governing body convenes twice a year to make policy decisions concerning finance, academics, and administration for the institutions growth. It also reviews academic activities and monitors the progress of programs in alignment with the institutions vision and mission, considering stakeholders input. As an advisory body, the governing body formulates rules and regulations to improve the institutions academic activities and ensure smooth functioning.

The Secretary, as the functional head, primarily oversees academics, infrastructure development, and overall institutional growth. They present proposals to the governing body for approval. The secretary serve as the chief executive of the college, coordinating with the sponsoring society, college management committee, and the governing body.

The academic council holds the authority to scrutinize and approve proposals related to courses of study, academic regulations, curricula, instructional and evaluation arrangements, and more. It can also establish admission regulations, rules for sports and extracurricular activities, and recommend the institution of new programs and scholarships. The academic council advises the governing body on academic matters and performs additional functions assigned by it.

The Principal advises on management, administrative, and developmental activities, keeping up with the latest education trends. They possess experience and expertise in academic and administrative work. The principal serves as the chief academic administrator and acts as a liaison between the management, staff, and students. The board of studies for each department prepares syllabi, suggests teaching and evaluation methodologies, recommends examiners, and coordinates research, teaching, extension, and other academic activities within the department or college. Heads of departments report to the principal
